[Laura] I currently work with people whose first language is British Sign Language. The sentence structure and language used in British Sign Language is different to the English language. This means that I've had to adapt the way I communicate with those jobseekers to allow clear communication, it's important to have accessibility options available as it helps bridge gaps in communication barriers that our jobseekers may face and empowers the individual to participate fully in conversations and decisions made about their journey to paid employment. I'm excited to discover technological advancements that are going to improve how we communicate in the future.
